

ABSTRACT

Coinjection of unfertilized mouse oocytes with sperm heads and exogenous nucleic acid encoding a transgene results in transgene-expressing embryos, reflecting nucleic acid-sperm head association before coinjection. Nonselective transfer to surrogate mothers of embryos resulting from coinjection produced offspring expressing the integrated transgene.